JOHNSON SAW SPECTRE.

paid any special attention to Johnson when he met him. He had not noticed anything unusual. He did not appear to be under the influence of liquor.

Harrison asked a number of other questions but the witness failed to give any information.

"He told me a different story," said Harrison as he excused the witness.

"Have you got that remark down on the record?" asked Peters, directing his question to Col. Jones.

"These remarks don't have to go on the record," said Harrison.

"Yes, they should," said Peters. "Mr. Harrison is making that kind of remarks all the time and they should go on the record."

"At least the Court will instruct the jury not to heed those remarks," suggested Prosser.

"The Court instructs the jury not to heed those side remarks made by either counsel in the case," said Judge Robinson.

John D. Holt, Sr., a very old man, was the next witness. He had to be led up to the witness stand. He also proved of no benefit to the case of the defense.

"Do you know the accused," was the first question asked.

"What?" exclaimed the witness with a startled expression and gazed intently at a corner of the room in quite a different direction to that where Johnson was sitting. Further questions produced similar indistinct answers, and Harrison soon excused the witness, stating that Mr. Holt evidently did not feel quite well.

Jacinto Teixeira, who followed Holt on the stand, proved as useless to the defense as his predecessors had been, and was also speedily excused.

Copeland, a negro stableman from Wailuku plantation, who was called as the next witness, could supply better material. He had just seen Johnson last fall, when he came to the stable to get a pair of mules, which he had been ordered to drive. Johnson named the mules which he had been told to get, and Copeland pointed the two animals out to him, as well as the sets of harness belonging to him. A few minutes later he caught the defendant placing the harness on an entirely different pair of mules.

On New Year's day Johnson had come to Copeland's house saying that he would like to spend the day with him. Copeland assented to this and they sat down and ate and drank together. Johnson had several glasses of wine.

After a while a Japanese blackman came to the house. He said that he had lost his watch and accused Johnson of having taken it. Johnson admitted that he had taken it, but said that he had given it to a third party, who lived in the neighborhood. The Japanese, Johnson and Copeland then went to this man, who gave up the watch to his owner.

When Copeland and Johnson came back to the former's house, Copeland noticed that Johnson wore a silver watch.

"I told him that some one might take his watch away from him, as they had done to the other fellow," said Copeland, "and said that he had better give it to the old woman, so that she could keep it for him. He gave the old woman the watch, and she put it up on a shelf. He never thought any more about it and went away without it."

"The next day at about 9 o'clock in the morning I met Johnson on the road right by the bridge, by Ah Chew's store. He was standing in the middle of the road."

"Johnson said that he had lost his watch in the stream and couldn't get hold of it again. He could see the watch very plainly, but every time he went down to get it had disappeared."

"Of course, I knew where the watch was, so I told him to go and see, the old woman and she might tell him something about it. He went right off to the house and got the watch. He came back and showed it to me and said, 'Thank you.'"

"Was Johnson under the influence of liquor at the time?" asked Harrison.

"I wouldn't say that he was drunk," answered Copeland, meditatively. "But should say that he was two sheets in the wind and the other one shaking."

"What impression did Johnson make on you in regard to the state of his mind?" asked Harrison.

"I just thought that when he was drinking he had a screw loose somewhere," answered Copeland, "and when he was not drinking he knew pretty well what he was doing. He was light-minded when he was drinking."

On his cross-examination of Copeland Attorney General Peters elicited from him the fact that he had received a letter from Harrison.

Harrison objected to any testimony regarding the letter, claiming that the document itself would be the best evidence for the defense.

"Did you ever get the reward?" asked Peters.

"No, I didn't," said Copeland. "I never got the evidence."

"Why didn't you?"

"I just put the letter away, and never did anything more about it."

"So you just spurned the offer of reward, did you?" remarked Peters, sarcastically.

"I am not that kind of a man," answered Copeland, proudly.

At this point Harrison called Peters' wrath down over his head by asking why he did not show the letter.

"Why don't you produce the letter?" he said. "You got it away from him."

"I did not," thundered Peters.

"Either you did or somebody else did," protested Harrison.

"What do you know about it?" thundered Peters again.

"I am asking for the letter," said Harrison.

"And I am asking what do you know about it?" roared Peters.

Harrison again ventured to object, but his feeble protests were drowned

Cure For The Blues

ONE MEDICINE THAT HAS NEVER FAILED
 Health Fully Restored and the Joy of Life Regained.

When a cheerful, brave, light-hearted woman is suddenly plunged into that perfection of misery, the BLUES, it is a sad picture. It is usually this way: She has been feeling "out of sorts."

for some time; head has ached and back also; has slept poorly, been quite nervous, and nearly fainted once or twice; head dizzy, and heart beats very fast; then that bearing-down feeling, and during her periods she is exceedingly despondent. Nothing pleases her. Her doctor says: "Cheer up; you have dyspepsia; you will be all right soon."

But she doesn't get "all right," and hope vanishes; then come the brooding, morbid, melancholy, everlasting BLUES.

Don't wait until your sufferings have driven you to despair, with your nerves all shattered and your courage gone, but take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. See what it did for Mrs. Rosa Adams, of 819 12th Street, Louisville, Ky., niece of the late General Roger Hanson, C.S.A. She writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham: I cannot tell you with pen and ink what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered with female troubles, extreme lassitude, 'the blues,' nervousness and that bearing-down feeling. I was advised to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it not only cured my female derangement, but it has restored me to perfect health and strength. The buoyancy of my younger days has returned, and I do not suffer any longer with despondency, as I did before. I consider Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a boon to sick and suffering women."

If you have some derangement of the female organism write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice.

In the tremendous volume of sound from the stenorian lungs of the Attorney General, and the letter was not produced.
